

Mentor's review of student's work over the last year

As the invited mentor for Gosia Winter in her unit of self-directed study Sustainable Management Theory: emerging ideas for complexity I witnessed the following:

- Gosia is self-motivated and diligent in creating the content and form of her study. She has continuously displayed a desire to hold herself accountable to her own high standards and has developed rigorous practices to achieve her goals.
- Gosia applied many of the insights gained in this study to her life. I believe the strongest demonstration of this, and the take-away 'portfolio piece', is the letter written on behalf of the staff at her school (see appendix in reflective summary).
- Gosia covered what she had primarily set out to achieve and found a natural and healthy point to close this first unit of her self-directed study.
- I see Gosia's emerging strength in accessing and promoting methodology free from its ideology – the fostering of humanist impulses in a school.

Jordan Walker
Dornach, Switzerland,
Dec. 7, 2011